

Radio equipment

Radio equipment devices (wireless devices) enable communication and networking without the use of wires. These devices are required to meet specific terms and conditions relating to the protection of health and safety, protection of the environment, avoidance of unnecessary use of public resources and compatibility with other in-service devices. EETT is the competent authority for the surveillance of the radio equipment market.